This was an important early industry in the region and still is relatively poorly documented in a systematic way. This volume focuses on one of the primary centers of early pottery making in Ohio and is a great start to creating a detailed history of this craft industry. Hopefully this is the first of additional volumes treating other areas of Ohio.0 of 0 people found the following review

A must have bookBy Chriss MillerThis book exceeded my expectations. A great reference book, very well researched and well presented.

Muskingum County in eastern Ohio was a center for stoneware manufacturing beginning in 1814. The stoneware was used locally and millions of gallons were also shipped by boat to communities all along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers throughout much of the 19th century. This book first discusses the history of the early stoneware potteries in Muskingum County with emphasis on the small rural family-owned "bluebird" kilns. This history is followed by a checklist containing the names of 762 stoneware potters, firms, dealers, and other individuals involved in the manufacturing and distribution of Muskingum County stoneware. The checklist was initially compiled by the late James L. Murphy, known as the Dean of Ohio Pottery Collectors. The book consists of over 500 pages and contains 26 tables, 322 figures, and an extensive reference list. The figures include maps, genealogical charts of some of the early potting families, images of some of the potters, and black and white photos of Muskingum County stoneware vessels from James Murphy's extensive collection. Maker's marks are also illustrated.
