Thomas S. Snyder : Mascoutah (Postcard History) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Mascoutah (Postcard History):

German emigrants established Mascoutah in 1837, naming it after the Mascouten Indians. Despite being located in an area filled with swamps, snakes, and disease, the village prospered, owing primarily to a flour mill that drew farmers into town. This brought customers to merchants and tradesmen. By the 1850s, Mascoutah was thriving and had established itself as the social and cultural center of the surrounding area. By 1900, it was the third-largest town in St.

Clair County and one of the most progressive. World War I, the establishment of Scott Air Force Base, Prohibition, and the Great Depression soon altered the course of Mascoutah's history, but the town retained its resiliency. For over 170 years, Mascoutah has grown and adapted to meet a changing world, retaining its small-town flair and pride in its German heritage.

About the Author Author Dr. Thomas S. Snyder spent 32 years as a civilian historian for the U.S. Air Force and has authored numerous histories and articles. He moved to Mascoutah in 1978. He, other collectors, and Mascoutah citizens combined their postcard collections to produce this snapshot of Mascoutah.
